The town of Magadan (59-34N, 150-48E) is the base for the exile camps and gold mines in the Kolyma area. The larger part of the town has been constructed since 1932.

1. Hamlet composed of brick bungalows, accommodation for free workmen. The majority of these were liberated exiles who had not received permission to return to their homes. The others were workers employed on a contract.
2. Road bridge over a small river, name not known. The bridge, which was constructed of reinforced concrete, was based on two concrete abutments and one main concrete center pier. In between the center pier and the abutments were two smaller concrete piers. The protective sides were composed of concrete posts connected by railings. The surface of the carriage way was asphalt. Dimensions were: length 60-80M, width 8-10M, and height 12-15M. The following is a rough sketch of the bridge:
